German Mark Reaches Vanishing Point REPUBLIC OF RHINE

This is a reproduction of the German mark-the pride of a proud people the loved of emperors and of slaves; the stuff of which, in other halcyon days, magnificent dreams were made. It was turned to industry, and industry flooded the world with toys and tools and locomotives. It was turned to war, and bayonets and helmets, hand-grenades and submarines were mobilized to do its bidding. It was turned to empire-building, and paths of steel cut a way across the desert; towns sprang up in the jungle; and great ships weighted the seven seas. Its factories and bayonets, its steel and steam highways, weaving dreams, wove a greater dream of conquest.

But there came an awakening. The dreams collapsed and the mark has passed on, and many there are to mourn its passing. For it is no more a thing of pride, but of paper bales. It is no longer the stuff of dreams, but of memories and museums. With 50,000,000 to the dollar, what once would have started a railroad now bids in vain for bread. Another currency will arise above this paper ruin, and that dreams of a different kind may arise with it will be the hope of the world.

Passive Resistance Increases Separatist Chances-M. Poincaré Makes Fresh Gesture

By SISLEY HUDDLESTON By Special Cable

PARIS, Sept. 10-The news of the imminent cessation of passive resistance in the Ruhr Valley has reached here, followed by rumors of Germany's wish to enter into direct negotiations with France. What gives verisimilitude to the report that passive resistance may cease soon is the decision of the German Economic Council to control the expenditure on this policy, which it is admitted is nore than the country can stand.

French official circles are inclined to consider this as a preliminary step to the stoppage of supplies. There is confident belief that the Chancellor, Dr. Gustav Streseman, who is acting very cautiously, and is regarded by Raymond Poincaré as very intelligent will shortly complete the evolution his policy and give way on the point that passive resistance should continue if negotiations were started.

The Christian Science Monitor repesentative has the authority for say ing that M. Poincaré will insist on the mplete surrender of "a forces, seen and unseen, which have prevented France and Belgium from obtaining the coal and coke they went into the Ruhr to seek.

British Navy Going Dry According to Admiral

New York, Sept. 10

Britain's Navy is fast going dry, declared Rear Admiral W. J. Anstey, retired English naval officer, on his arrival today on the Cameronia. Asserting that the temperance movement came from the officers themselves, he added: "When I first became an officer there was eavy drinking. Today it is quite different. At the last dinner I attended on one of His Majesty's ships, out of all the officers present who drank the King's teast, only two took port and the rest drank water. There is much less drinking among the sailors because of temperance pledges and educational work."

BULGARIA DENIES WARLIKE ACTIVITY

> By S. TONJOROFF By Special Cable

SOFIA, Sept. 10-The Premier, Prof. Alex Zankoff, as acting Minister of Foreign Affairs in the absence of Christo Kalloff at Geneva, has denied categorically several charges from Jugoslavian sources to the effect that Bulgaria was preparing to take an active part in the Greco-Italian con-troversy in aid of Italy. ITALY AND GREECE ACCEPT DECISION OF ALLIED POWERS

War Clouds Disperse as Approval Is Given to Proposals of Council of Ambassadors

News of Possibility of Italy Annexing Fiume Is Confirmed in Latest Press Dispatches

Bu Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, Sept. 10-With the coming of this new week a greater calm has settled over Europe. Both Italy and Greece have accepted the decision of the Council of Ambassadors. The result is that the war clouds seem to be lifting. There is greater hopefulness both in official circles and among the men in the street than obtained here Saturday. Whether this is founded on actual developments remains to be seen. Be this as it may, however, neither the Italo-Greek conflict nor the Italo-Serbian dispute over Fiume can yet be regarded as definitely settled.

In the Italo-Greek case much depends on the interpretation of the "complete fulfillment" demanded of the Greek Government. It may be assumed, however, that Italy will now cease its military preparations in the Corfu archipelago. It is quite certain it will "sit tight" there until a full settlement of its demands is had There is no one to drive it out.

Press Changes Attitude

One of the most notable features of the latest developments in the the Treaty of Neuilly; that Bul- Italo-Greek crisis is the attitude of garla was encouraging raids by armed the English press. When the Italian bandits on Jugoslavian Macedonia; forces first landed at Corfu, the press that Bulgaria had a secret alliance here, without being friendly to Greece, was openly hostile to Italy. Italian sentiment quickly reacted and charged Great Britain with unfriendliness. For the moment Italy was being forced whose diplomacy and press were juick to take advantage of this opportunity to bring Italy more strongly to its side, even at the expense of the traditional Anglo-Italian friendship.

sections of the English press were beginning to see this. Today it is almost universally recognized and there is a decided tendency to look for reasons to excuse Signor Mussolini's action in dispatching his ultimatum to Athens and following it with the bombardment and seizure of Corfu. Even the Manchester Guardian says this morning:

NEGRO TREK FROM GEORGIA LAID TO ECONOMIC SITUATION

Atlanta City Club Report Says Migration Northward Will Continue Until Industrial Labor Market Is Glutted

Negro migration from south to north is attributed to an economic situation "which can only be changed by altering the conditions," in a report of the investigating committee of the City Club of Atlanta. The report, City Club of Atlanta. The report, signed by Joel Hunter, chairman, also says that emigration "will continue until the industrial labor market becomes glutted and then it will gradually diminish." The full text follows:

The committee on Negro migration of the City Club of Atlanta finds itself confronted with a difficult task when it attempts to review thoroughly the multitude of ideas, phases, angles and explanations that the committee has had presented to it. The social relations of two races occupying a territory well-nigh covering one-half of the United States, and those relations affected by all sorts of climatic conditions, in-herited sympathies and acquired preju-dices, add to the bewildering array of thoughts and suggestions which the

Two Distinct Phases

Then, with an honest acknowledg-ment of such conditions as all fair-minded men regret, the elimination of all sentiment and especially emphasiz-ing the sociological background and the economic conditions, the committee ibmits its report. Two distinct phases are at once apparent as we begin the consideration of this subject. The immediate phase concerns the present effect on industry and agriculture from the tremendous wave of migration now sweeping over the south, while the permanent phase deals with the far-reaching results of the migration over a period of years.

We are dealing with the question from a Georgia viewpoint only, and shall discuss the second or permanent phase, which in some degree embraces the first phase. In arriving at our conclu-sions, we have been influenced solely by the facts as we found them—gathby the facts as we found them—gath-ered from thoroughly reliable sources and representative of the views of both farmer and city man, white and Negro. The migration of the Negro is in no sense a sectional issue; it affects di-rectly every community in the Nation and it can be fairly considered only as and it can be fairly considered only as a national movement with whatever of good or ill it forebodes. It is not a problem of the last three or four years. It had its beginning shortly after the Civil War and for 50 years the normal volume of the tide was about 10,000 per year. During the labor shortage resulting from the World War the rate that the property of the tide was about 10,000 had been cannot but show great advantage to his credit.

An industrial vacuum has drawn into minor "causes," but they but intensify the economic answer.

Local Causes Cited

The industrial vacuum is too well known to require further discussion, but the "field" deserves special consideration. For years there has been a strong tion. For years there has been a strong movement from rural to urban communities, due jo the more comfortable and convenient living conditions and the better educational facilities. The facts indicate clearly that white Georgia farmers are trekking to the larger centers in ever-increasing numbers, which impels us to study the basic conditions of Georgia rural life, even more broadly than for a solution of Negro migration alone.

As recently set down by Bishop J. O. Filipper (Negro), after a conference of Negroes from every section of the State, and subsfantiated by informed white citizens, the industrial vacuum found a maximum of labor in the south at just the moment when there were few, if any, attractions to counteract the economic pull, and that the local causes which are impelling the Negro

We must admit without hesitation that Georgia has paid too little heed to the improvement of its educational standards and this is as true compara-tively for the whites as the Negroes Until our whole plan for education has been thoroughly modernized, we cannot hope for an influence on this migration save from the schools.

And there is an inequality in law enforcement, which is just the same natural symptom which has in every age been noticeable where a superior and an inferior race in nearly equa numbers have occupied the same ter

It matters not whether this inequality be grave or petty, nor whether it pro-ceed from judge, jury or contracts with white business men, it is none committee has endeavored to consider an element to be reckoned with. Certain with such care as each individual subject seemed to deserve.

We have then the situation that agriculture in Georgia is unprofitable o the whites and well-nigh impossible for the Negro; that housing conditions are poor, educational facilities are bad. It is significant that the Negro increases numerically only on southern farms and that the death rate as compared with the birth rate is higher on northern farms. The figures for the past five years are as follows: Northern farms, death rate 134 per Southern cities, death rate 127 per 100 births.

There can be no question that there are but two means by which migration may be retarded. One is to open wide the gates to immigrants and thus fill up the labor vacuum with foreigners, and the other is to change completely the conditions in Georgia to put them on a par with those of the industrial centers. Neither of these will stop the movement for the Negro has himself learned his adaptability to industry and the ease of life with a fixed wage to the uncertainty of existence on the farm.

In other words, it is an absolute economic situation which car only be changed by altering the condi tions, both primary and secondary, which brought about the functioning of the economic law.

In presenting this report the com mittee wishes to point out that the conclusions reached herein are but the natural deductions arising from the facts and conditions as the committee Our study forces us to a question and a conclusion which are of vita importance to the welfare of Georgia First.—Whether the tenant systen farming is very largely responsible for the volume of Negro migration from Georgia, and whether it conduces Second.—That the antiquated tax system now in force in the state, ag-gravates both the agricultural and the industrial conditions which makes it possible for the labor vacuum in the industrial centers to break down the economic structure of this section. Your committee therefore urges the apportance of careful consideration of these matters by special committees, to the end that the City Club may per-form its full duty in the premises.

tailed its meeting as a special mark of feeling for the bereavement of Japan.

GENEVA, Sept. 10—Vindication for the League of Nations and the policy toward the Corfu complication advocated by its stanchest champions in the Council and the Assembly is seen here in the prompt action of the conference of Ambassadors and the way in which their demands on Greece correspond with the terms in the second part of the proposals of the Spanish delegate to the Council the other day which, although not formally adopted on account of the objections of Signor Salandra, were nevertheless communicated to the ambassadors for their information, along with other items in the minutes of the meeting, due to the insistence of Lord Robert Cecil.

It is considered that the Council is entitled to a preponderance of credit sively, on the creation of a permafor these results, which are held to nent health bureau, with a permanent indicate that the end of the critical health officer or surgeon-general, a stage is near. Saturday—Boston at Cincinnati; New York at Chicago; Brooklyn at Pittsburgh; Philadelphia at St. Louis.

It has been a pretty hard week for a possible opening to gain a little ground on their adversaries—or, failing, to descend still closer toward the grasp of that western duo.

Until they came together at Forbes Field on Labor Day, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati had not met since the first of July. Now they are making up for lost time, and the recent collision, with games with St. Louis sandwiched in, have made it very strenuous for the Cincinnati nine.

When the final surge of the eastern clubs into hostile territory begins, the scales may turn at last in favor of the westerners, one or both of them. At any rate, it will be a struggle down to the final week or 10 days. Most teams play their best brand of baseball at home, but the Giants this year have appeared as exceptions to that rule. All three leaders are claiming that the schedule will shortly turn to their advantage; which of them is right remains to be seen.

In spite of its success against the world's champions, Brooklyn has not fared as well, on the whole, as Chicago and St. Louis, its rivals in the center of the standing. The Superbas are quite a piece below the 500 percentage level, and look like nothing better than a sixth-placer from now on. The Cardinals, however, may still give the Cubs a battle for fourth.

Hamilton ran second for the first three relay, but in the final relay Miss Filkey overcame a 10-yard lead to put Chicago at the final ward.

Canadians Pleased With Results at Track and Field Meet

TORONTO, Sept. 10 (Special)-Followers of Canadian women's track and field sports are much pleased with the outlook for these sports, following the showing made at the annual Athletic Day of the Canadian National Exhibi-Day of the Canadian National Exhibition here Saturday, as the track was very heavy. All the international events were held with the exception of the 12-mile Marathon, which could not be held as the track was too heavy for 12 laps.

The feature events of the day were the 100-meter invitation dash, in which eight started; the girls' 100-yard open, girls' quarter-mile relay, and international schoolboys' one-mile relay.

A big surprise was momentarily girls' quarter-mile relay, and international schoolboys' one-mile relay.

A big surprise was momentarily caused when it was announced that H. B. Lever of New York Intercollegiate American Amateur Athletic Association champion at 100 yards had broken the world's record for 100 meters by covering the distance in 10 2-5s... but the course was remeasured and found to be two yards short. Lever was in the lead at the start and managed to hold it to the tape, although A. G. Washington, of University of Chicago, was going the fastest at the end and was beaten by only the smallest possible margin. E. J. Higgins of the University of Michigan was third, a foot back. Vince and Ponton, local Canadians, were fourth and fifth, right behind the leaders.

Friday—Boston at Cincinnati; New York at Chicago; Brooklyn at Pittsburgh; Philadelphia at St. Louis.

It has been a pretty hard week for the two clubs trailing the Giants in the National League pennant chase. Cincinnati reliquished second place a day or so ago, only to win it back yesterday in a decisive victory over Pittsburgh. Neither the Reds nor Pittsburgh have been able to make much headway in their own section of the country, but to maintain the balance the New York pace-setters have lost ball games with more than their accustomed regularity. The league standing therefore shows little change, with New York in the lead at £18, Cincinnati second, 4½ games behind, at 586, and Pittsburgh third, only a half game in arrear of the Reds.

New York is scheduled to play two games at Boston beginning today. The Braves are not nearly the easy proposition they proved for the champions early in the season, so the contests hold more than ordinary interest, with the pennant campaign being so intensely waged. For Boston it is a series to keep out of the cellar; for the Giants, a possible opening to gain a little ground on their adversaries—or, failing, to descend still closer toward the grasp of that western duo.

GAMES FOR THE WEEK

Cleveland has shown such marked superiority over Detroit in the series just closed that second place for the Indians speaker shows again that it is the best of all the normally constructed outfits in its own circuit. Without the expenditure of a great deal of money, and with its few recent player transfers resulting disadvantageously, for the most part, from its own standpoint, the Forest City has won a high rating through "class" displayed upon the playing field, not in the marts of trade.

There is no telling how the race might have come out had Cleveland had a little more success with its pitchers; but that is neither here nor there, and the Indian fans will have to be satisfied with second place, two or three batsmen captured to the bowlers more than the batters. The visitors won the toss and sent the locals to bat. The top end of the batting order did not offer any opposition and the first four wickets fell for 7 runs.

A. M. Inglis and G. E. C. Goodman improved matters for the fifth wicket but the locals would have been badly off but for the tail end, H. G. Wookey, D. W. Saunders and N. Seagram between them putting on more than half of Toronto's 92 runs.

and won 7 to 3.

Shelburn's lineup included two famous international stars, L. E. Stoddard at No. 2 and Tommy Hitchcock Jr. at back both of whom were members of the team that brought back the International Challenge Cup from England three years ago. This pair was the bul-wark of the attack and defense of the victorious four.

While the Army team was no match for the higher rated horsemen of Shel-burne, it derived a great deal of experi-ence and practice for the coming meet-ings with the British invaders from the session. Maj. A. H. Wilson was at No. 1, and his brilliant exhibition of horse-manship, for which he is justly famous, was used in counting for his side. Maj. J. K. Kerr was at No. 2, Col. + + + The secretary of the American Red Cross in Constantinople reports that work is proceeding steadily upon the task of evacuating the remainder of the Russian groups passed by the so-ciety's examining board. Since June 1 the Red Cross has sent 1257 Russians to the United States. There are 385 still registered who will go by later boats. All applicants are carefully examined by the society with the cooperation of the American Consul-General and a board of naval officers. There are now less than 8000 Russians in this city registered for evacuation. In January the number of Russian refugees in Constantinople was more than 30,060. At present the only American organizations extending relief are the Red Cross and the Christian Science Relief Fund.

Several thousand Armenians living it inguished architects and engineers in the eastern vilayets of Anatolia have asked the Angora Government for permission to leave Turkey and emigrate to the Soviet republic of Armenia. The fact that Kurdish raiding parties have been continuously harassing Arme nian peasants may be the cause of the migrations. An American relief worker who has recently returned to Constantinople from the Caucasus, states that a large number of Armenians who were sent into the Kuban districts are dissatisfied with the treatment they are receiving from their Circassian overlords and are making efforts to return to Georgia and Azer-

Despite the disappointment over the failure of two of the largest American concessionaires to begin operations in Turkey, the Constantinople press is still hoping for "big things" from American corporations. All sorts of wild schemes are discussed. The latest is a proposal from a group to

Open November 26

A national exposition of music, the first comprehensive exhibit of its kind and scope to be attempted in the IN RODEO PROTEST United States, will be held in Boston at Mechanics Building, Nov. 26 to Dec. 1 inclusive. The exposition will be utilized for the exhibit and demonstration of every conceivable sort of instrument and will fill the Mechanics n explaining his recent protest to Hall and some smaller halls of the great exhibition building.

The exposition is being directed by the National Exhibition Association, Inc., which already has secured the indorsement and active co-operation of a large number of musical organizations, manufacturers and dealers, as well as musicians of world fame. Some of the manufacturers contemplate re-producing parts of their factories for he exhibition of the throngs of music lovers who are expected to attend.

Besides the exhibition of all the known modern musical instruments, will be a display of ancient musical instruments, obtained from notable collections of antiques and museums. This is but one of the many incidental attractions that the promoters have planned.

Harry L. Katz, formerly manager of the Washington Concert Bureau, is president of the exhibition association and has working with him a number of men of wide experience in public expositions.

in western Canada are steadily improving, according to Henry Detchon, gening, according to Henry Detch ing, according to Henry Detchon, general manager of the Canadian Credit Men's Trust Association. Western wholesale firms, he states, are now doing business on firmer ground than they were a year ago. Moreover, the prospects for further betterment are good. There has been an encouraging decrease in the number of failures among wholesale houses this year as compared with 1922. Mr. Detchon stated. The harvesting of a fairly large crop this fall, which is now pretty well assured, will mean the settlement of deots, and this will stimulate business still further, he says.

DURING THE WEEK

Orient's Need for Finished Products Sends Prices Up-Non-Ferrous Metals Higher

NEW YORK, Sept. 10 (Special)—A sudden demand for steel that even the most skilled economists and steel trade authorities did not and could not predict has set in because of the disaster caused by the elements in Japan.

While the fires were still raging in the stricken areas, cables were being sent to the American steel makers from Japanese steel merchants in the cities unaffected, asking for prices and sometimes getting options.

unaffected, asking for prices and some-times getting options.

What they wanted chiefly was gal-vanized sheets, wire rods, pipe, wire, and nails. Recent fire laws passed in Tokyo demand that roofs of all new houses and buildings erected be of metal. Light gauged galvanized sheets best fill that purpose. Wire rods are further drawn into wire and then made into nails in Japan.

Japan's Steel Needs Large

Early after the disaster it was estimated that Japan would require from 100,000 to 200,000 tons of steel for rebuilding, but at that time it was believed that many office and commercial buildings of structural steel or reinforcing bar construction had been destroyed. Later reports revealed that most of them were still standing.

Several of the large Japanese exporting and importing houses, through their New York branches, were quick to inquire prices and get options on steel from the American mills, and be ready to act quickly in case of orders from their home offices. Early inquiries included 400 miles of pipe, 100,000 kegs of nails, several lots of tin plate of 10,000 boxes each.

Luckly Japan's own steel pleas boxes each.

Luckily Japan's own steel plants were not located in the devastated districts. However, Japan makes only half the steel which she requires in normal times, importing the other half. American mills will meet with strong competition from England. Belgium and possibly Germany in supplying the special steel demand which is to come from Japan.

Shorter Day Raises Costs

Shorter Day Raises Costs

The next development of importance was the decision of the large steel concerns to advance the wages of their 10-hour shift men 10 per cent. When the 12-hour workers had been reduced to eight hours their wages had been advanced 25 per cent; thus the men who worked eight hours were getting the same wages as the men who were habitually working 10 hours. This caused ill feeling among the latter class. Because of this latest step all workers have been treated alike: the increased cost of production has been divided on a 50-50 basis, shared by employers and employees alike. The shortening of the working day will increase the costs of steel making from $2 to $3 a ton, is the latest belief in the trade.

There have been more advances than declines during the last fortnight. Iron and steel scrap has advanced 50 cents per ton, pig iron has been marked up the same amount in eastern Pennsylvania, coke is about 75 cents a ton higher, warehouse prices of cold-finished steel have ben advanced. The only reductions have been in Chicago prices of bar, plates and shapes announced by one large maker for the fourth quarter, ranging from $2 to $4 a ton; also in warehouse prices of bolts. The unusual strength of steel plates was proved by a large oil producer which had inquired for 9000 tons for fabricating into storage tanks. Usually such large consumers get concessions, because it could not get any material shading from the $2.50, Pittsburgh price.

Buying in August proved to be better than in July, and it now develops that June was the poorest month this year from the standpoint of sales. Production fell off somewhat in August, pig cent. Last week the United States Steel Corporation opened its books for the fourth quarter on sheets and tin plate and announced that its prices would be unchanged. Blue-annealed sheets, and announced that its prices would be unchanged. Blue-annealed sheets, sheets at 3.85c. galvanized at 5c. autobody at 5.35c, and tin plate at $5.50 a box of 100 pounds. The corporation will have only about two months' production to sell for the fourth quarter, being compelled to carry over one month's production that should have been designed in the present period.

Zine np $3 a Ton

Zine np $3 a Ton

Zinc ap $3 a Ton

Zinc is the chief nonferrous metal that will be needed by Japan for rebuilding. In normal times that Nation takes from one-fifth to one-half of American zinc exports. The metal is used for coating black sheets for roofing purposes. This possibility of increased demand was largely instrumental in boosting zinc prices $3 a ton during the week to 6.55c a pound. East St. Louis. There were good sales for export to Great Britain and Italy. The chief domestic buyers were the operators who wish to speculate on the hopes of higher prices soon.

Whether by coincidence or otherwise, inquiries from Japan for copper were conspicuous. Total inquiries from that Nation were 3000 tons, the largest amount for a long time. Though the need of copper is not so obvious in rebuilding as iron and steel, it might find its use in replacing electrical equipment, transmission lines, building hardware, etc.

Sentiment in copper was improved by Sentiment in copper was improved by the advance of a pound and a half in the price of copper at London early in the week which caused the American quotation to be lifted isc to a range of 13%c to 137sc a pound. Copper production in August was less than in July and sentiment appeared better:

In spite of the great increase of secondary schools they do not touch large masses of the rural population. Every market town, each "node" at the crossing of communication lines, should possess its higher school. But at the same time the authorities must realize that the conditions of the rural chool are quite different from those in urban centers. At present they can only think in terms of towns. The same rigid regulations, the identical formulæ are determinant for all types of schools. There lies the very tion. They must be different in particulars but one in the general outlook. I stress the latter point because there is a grave danger that directly the official becomes alive to the question of the rural school he rural secondary schools must show the question of the rural school he will exalt the letter and kill the spirit. bove all things the atmosphere, the large freedom that has been the characteristic of the English public school at its best, must be preserved. Otherwise we shall have merely technica' or trade schools which are quite a different thing.

There should, of course, be such schools but for a later age. The es-sential thing is to preserve the atmosphere. That is the duty of the eacher, not the administrator. But the only way to bring this about is to give scope to the teachers themposed by Whitehall.

Better Teachers First

many years yet by far the larger num-But even with this achieved, for can be attacked at once on a large front; it is here that education has greatly gone amiss. The village shoot should be the center and light of the village; and the schoolmaster schoolmistress) in a sense, the most important person in the community. Most important—not most pompous—but most necessary.

What is wrong at present is the status of the teacher. He is apart, isolated. Hence his work is often far his own temperament, partly because he is severely ignored by the "cultured" few. And if his status be bettered, he himself must be better, bettured" few. And if his status be better, bettered, he himself must be better, better trained, better qualified, drawn often from a more highly-educated environment. At present we are in a vicious circle which must be broken at all costs at some point. There are ways of doing this which cannot be touched on now. But if once we get this teacher of a higher type, I feel that we shall get the change in the that we shall get the change in the curriculum. There has been much improvement of recent years but there is much still to amend.

the writer's observation only a few days ago. In many countries boys ers, translators, etc. Those of the Faculty of Law have been taken as mentary teachers live too far from big centers to be able to attend secondary schools. (Here is an additional argument for more secondary schools). The local authorities thereshort the number of students regularly accepted as assistant-teachers, a schools). The local authorities there-fore provide what are called "central classes." They are taught by per-sons of experience in education. In one such class the writer found that the pupils—country boys and girls aged about 15—were being taught English literature. Weekly questions were given them, their papers corrected, and alas! alas! model answers drawn up, typed and sent round to them all. Take one question: "What is meant by epic poetry?" The model answer was beautifully complete and concise. admirable for a pocket encyclopedia.
It discussed in 20 lines all the "epics" from the work of Homer to that of William Morris, and laid down their several characteristics besides defining "epic" in highly learned fashion.

And yet the poor pupils confessed

after it all that they had not the least idea what "epic" meant, and did not want to know! Why should they? And a protest that this was to teach "seeming" of knowledge without the reality was met by the answer that they had all to pass the pre-liminary examination of the Board of Education, that English literature was a compulsory subject and that the type of question set had been faithfully followed! Is further argu-

In the El Dorado School, which opened in San Antonio, Tex., a year ago, a primary geography was introduced into low third grade, the course of study requiring that the first 100 pages be covered. The teacher set out to give the children as much joy as possible in this subject, and at the end of six months it was voted a most interesting subject by the children, for they had come to look upon the geography period as play time, party time, surprise time.

Note-Books and Scrap-Books

The note-book and scrap-book meth ods were introduced with splendid results. Even the non-Chicago Science" series, the "Univer-OPERATE as an educational academic world is rendered accessible sity of Chicago Mathematical" series to the influence of the university and the publications in the field of agency has been the directing purpose of the University of Chicago Press. In this way the university was enabled to spread its influence to all corners of the United States and into Europe. The idea underlying the or-ganization of the press came from William Rainey Harper's creativeness. President Harper had a strong feeling that the community at large must be included in the university's scope of activity. The university press was established as a practical instrument to further this phase of the university's service. It was founded in 1893 by John D. Rockefeller as an integral part of the newly-formed University of Chicago.

In pursuance of President Harper's conception, the press was made pri-marily noncommercial; it was created tions in the school room and such marily noncommercial; it was created simple terms as ballot box, vote and to publish, not for profit but for party were stressed.

Each lesson was approached with enthusiasm. They even had a dressup party. in London and Paris.
As a Russian and a friend of Scria bin, it is natural that M. Koussevitzky should be known as an interpreter of Russian works, and especially of those of the moderns of his country. Yet he disclosed himself to British hearers as also a fine exponent of the classical German school. The reviewer for The Christian Science Monitor of his concerts in London last season described his reading of the Brahms Third Symphony as "intensely interesting," and commented particularly on his "wonderful way of 'spacing' the music he interprets," adding that "in a texture so close and continuous as that of Brahms, this right spacing gives new beauty to bridge sections which are often regarded as mere routine work.

The reviewer found his Mozart readings as intimate as his interpretations of Scriabin: "The G minor Symphony as interpreted by him gave the impression that here too he was working from the memory of a friendship. He brushed aside the usual tradition of tragedy and restlessness, and in its place went back to the flery young genius who composed 'Figaro.'

The performance of Tschaikowsky's "Francesca da Rimini" was described as "amazing:" "This work . . . was caught up by this genius and swept along with a force that fulfilled to the utmost what the composer had hoped for, but not wholly achieved."

As for M. Koussevitzky's qualities as a conductor, the Monitor's London reviewer had this to say after his first concert with the London Symphony Orchestra: "This remarkable man can so hold an orchestra, so play upon it; that even the proudest, most demo-cratic among British orchestral organizations capitulated entirely to him and became as responsive as a Guarnerius violin under his touch.

As a double-bass player M. Koussevitzky has been hailed as the greatest virtuoso since Dragonetti. He studied at the music school of the Philhar-monic Society at Moscow and was ap-pointed professor there in 1900. In 1904 he became a member of the Im-perial Orchestra. In 1907 he estab-lished his own orchestra, giving regu-lar concerts in Petrograd and Moscow, and making tours along the Volga until the war. So far as available records show, M. Koussevitzky visited the United States in 1916-17, but never conducted in America.

He has composed a concerto in A minor and several shorter pieces for the double-bass.

IN A former article some of the more important housing schemes of the London County Council were discussed. It must not, however, be are accommodated. Although it is in the heart of London, a considerable transformation means in the lives of the people concerned. In place of hovels, sunless and unsavory, a series of stately and conveniently planned buildings arise overlooking a quite considerable stretch of green field. The buildings themselves contain dwellings, or lettings as they are called, with accommodation varying from five to two rooms. The buildings here have a ground and four superimposed floors, the top two being combined into a series of cottage dwellings. Each floor, except the ground and the top, has its balcony from which the lettings are approached, the balconies being reached by common staircases at the extremities of the buildings. Another interesting clearance has been made in a district known as the Brady Street area. Here, in order that there might be space for a recreation ground of 11/2 acres, which was badly needed in the neighborhood, it was only possible to rehouse about 85 per cent of the displaced popula-tion, and another building had to be provided on a small site about three-quarters of a mile distant. This house, known by the delightful name of Whiston House, Goldsmith's Row. is no exaggeration to say, is one of the most successful contempo rary architectural achievements. In planning these buildings, while aiming at economy, an attempt is always made to consider the convenience of the inhabitants. Where there are many floors a difficulty must arise in connection with the children. And for this reason the balconies are, of course, useful, for they enable the small children to be in the fresh air while remaining under the supervision of their mother. Every letting is provided with a bathroom, larder, scullery and sink, whatever else may be the accommodation. On each balcony there is a dust chute for the use of the inmates of each floor.

Of course, the whole subject of clearances and rehousing is intimately bound up with that vaster matter known as town planning. FASCISMO NOW BECOMES REGULAR

Constitutional Standing to Revolutionary Party

By RAOUL MARTINI ROME, Aug. 10 (Special Correspondence)-The conception of Fascismo was revolutionary. Its march to power MORAL LEADERSHIP grounds. The overwhelming majority of Italians were convinced that the revolution was necessary to save the country from chaos. But parliamentary tradition is so firmly embedded in Italian mentality that Fascismo itself recognized the fact that it could not continue indefinitely in power on a revolutionary basis. At the same time Fascismo was determined to remain in power. Herein lay the danger of civil war. The longer Benito Mussolini continued to govern by armed ing the issue to a head while his personal army was still unquestionably loyal and the majority of the civil population was on his side. He propassed by Socialist pressure in 1918.

Parliament of Groups The outcome was a Parliament made up of a dozen or 15 groups, the largest being those of the Socialists and the ulars (Roman Catholics). weakness proved to be that no ministry could long command a working majority. In the years '20, '21, '22 ministries rose and fell with disturbing frequency. Sometimes for long intervals the King found it impossible to choose a leader who could form a Cabinet acceptable to a majority in Parliament. This state of affairs reacted on the country most disastrously. Contempt for law increased, disorders multiplied—in short, anarchy reigned Fascismo proposed a new law whereby any party receiving one vote more than any other party in the general elections should be entitled to two-thirds of the deputies of Parlia-ment; that is, 356 votes of 535. The other third would be divided propor-Further, the entire list of candidates tionately among the minority is more or less subject to Government revision, at the present time Fascista

This Fascista proposal was opposed bitterly by the Socialists and by the Populars. The Socialists remained united in their opposition to the end of the struggle. The most notable speeches from their ranks were de-livered by Signor Turati and Signor Labriola. Before the final vote was taken, the solidarity of the Populars was shattered. Their pathetic discom-fiture was signalled by the resignation Sturzo, the secretary and official leader of their party. Don Sturzo's demission was brought about by pressure from the Vatican. The latter appreciated the peril to the church of rousing the active hostility of the Fascisti throughout the country. It is possible that for the Sicilian priest's forced retirement, Signor Mussolini paid a price. If this is the case, it become apparent as the weeks It is rather significant that re-Signor Mussolini has declared he will rehang the crucifix in the national Parliament. The crucifix has not been there since 1870.

The discussion in Parliament occupied something over a week. Signor Mussolini had said that he wished the proposal to be fully and freely de-bated. If he was sincere in this statement, he must have been gratified at the outcome. No such flow of oratory for many a long year. He expressed himself smilingly as very much satis-fled with the large volume of speech making, because he knew now where every one of them stood, and this was a distinct advantage to Fascismo.

Premier's Complete Confidence

Before the vote was taken, Signor Mussolini spoke. He spoke with unusual calm and with the utmost confibut ever-present threat of Fascismo farce on one or two occasions since that irritates the liberalism of the the war, seems likely to be very to start until after the passage of certain preliminary tests designed to Signor Mussolini swept the Socialthe boards with a few brief sentences. Their contention that his régime is a dictatorship carried little weight with him, inasmuch as their rule in 1920-21 had been much more of a dictatorship and altogether ruinous to law order and anything like the rehabilitation of the country. His most scathing pronouncement was delivered against Signor Gronchi of the Popular Party. The Populars had provided him a good opening. In the last hours of the discussion they had shown him that they were more concerned for their own welfare than for the fundamentals involved.

Said he: Charges Against Populars

"Gentlemen of the Popular Party, your contentions are full of contradictions. The small business of twofifths, or of three-quarters, or of some other fraction of this electoral arithmetic does not interest me. Politics cannot be a small bargain counter. A thing is either right or it is not right I am so little a politician that I could give you the 30 or 40 deputies more that you haggle about, but I will no do it because that would be unmoral; because it would be a transaction which must be repugnant to your conscience as it is to mine.' By this parliamentary victory Fascismo becomes regular, takes on convote was forced by the altogether too apparent threat of armed action, and even if at the forthcoming elections Fascisti clubs shall constitute an important factor in determining the size of the Fascista majority, the fact remains that Fascismo has at last escaped from its embarrassing and perilous unconcstitutional position. The best that can be said for this Electoral Reform Bill Gives liberties are sacrificed to a strong.

Students were the first protestants against the award of Shantung to Japan by the Versailles Treaty and students, today, are in the forefront of the movement to oust the Japanese from Manchuria.

The boycott, which has been carried on against Japanese goods, has been successful in greatly reducing Japan's trade with China. C. J. All of the very speediest airplanes of the last two years have borne a marked recemblance to each other, but the designers who seek maximum speed in seaplanes have not even agreed among themselves as yet whether it is better to use a standard racing type of airplane, simply replacing the wheels with floats, or to strike out along entirely different lines and build a flying boat, the body and float being combined in one piece. Previous to this year, the flying boat seemed to find most favor, and the machines with separate floats have not a single victory to their credit since the war. Both the Italians and the British have used flying boats, and the highest speed ever made by a seaplane of any type in a race around a closed circuit stands to the credit of the British boat which won last year's race in Italy at an average of 146 miles an hour. This year, however, there seems to be a turn in the other direction. All of the American seaplanes are of the sepa-

little flower shining in the greenness of the meadow, said: "Alas! If I were only blue like you, little flower. would be happy."

"Ho!" said the cornflower, "that's simple enough. Just give me your song, which pleases me, and you may have my color. "With pleasure," said the lark. So they traded. The cornflower opened her tiny mouth and sang more and more sweetly till the wind stood still to listen. The lark flashed upward, a thought they were happy. But, at dawn, the lark missed his own lovely voice and tried piteously to sing. The little flower grew tired of singing and sighed for her blue eyes to open each morning to the sun. So the lark flew over the flower and his tears fell on her dull little petals till she looked up and saw him.

"Oh, please," said the little cornflower, "my charming blue color-give it back to me."

"My lovely voice," sobbed the lark And once more they traded. Then, at last, they were truly contented and the bird looked with pleasure at his brown coat and the little flower's blue eyes twinkled, as she listened to the sone of the lark high in the sky.

"Let's," said 19, and the two friends

He visited Russia, Germany, Belgium, Denmark, Sweden, but it is his estimate of the German schools that is of special note. He admits frankly that Germany, already in the '80s, was gradually usurping the place of France as leader, had gone ahead in her Industrial Art Schools, and was exerting a more powerful influence on the other European countries. He upbraids "the indifference and apathy of the public who do not yet perceive that the most cruel, the most violent war that Germany has carried on against us is the industrial war." And he winds up by "declaring loudly, with the consciousness of fulfilling a patriotic duty, that today the organization of our artistic and industrial education is a work of national defense of the same importance as the organization

A few wise people in America are admitting as eloquently and as publicly as they can that America not only cannot compete with Europe in industrial art, but is not supplying the training that would arm her artists and craftsmen for the competition. But these few are very much the exception. The tendency of the lithography. American in art, as in everything, is to overdo the virtues of self-reliance

Exhibit in Paris

PARIS (Special Correspondence)-If, more and more, painting is swerying from a faithful transcription of nature, if it gets freer and freer in it interpretation, if the schemes of colors have become so daring as to make the blues and greens of nature appear almost too conventional, it is all the more reason why the artist should immerse himself again in the simplicity of nature. Of the different appeals of nature to artists we are riven a striking example in the simultaneous exhibition of Maurice Utrillo and Suzanne Valadon.

Maurice Utrillo's art is kindred to that of the signboard painter. He does not make use of the recent technical acquisitions; he paints with ingenuousness. His vision is at once realistic and lyrical vision. He is a narrator like the primitives. He inventories all the details and all the constitutive parts of the scene he represents. Utrillo is today one of the few artists who dare to copy nature. He does it faithfully and with exquisfull of color, of vivid conflicts between fresh nuances and harsh hues. His "Sacré-Coeur," all silvery against the light sky, with, at its base, a 30 years. Now I can go out and make group of variegated houses, is strik-ing. In his older manner a little church in a landscape all in grays and subdued greens was perhaps more moving.

Suzanne Valadon in certain land-scapes of precision of drawing and variety of color is not so far from her son-Maurice Utrillo. But, her general manner is freer and more aggressive. Her figures are solidly modeled and alive though they may

"A friend of mine went out sketching one day, and when he came back he was out of tune with himself and everything else. 'What's wrong?' I asked. 'Didn't get a thing,' he said. 'Let me see it!' And he showed me his 'Why man,' I told him, 'I can sketch. tell you what's wrong with that. You didn't make it!' He looked puzzled. 'It's not you, it Cornoyer!' And it was true. He had seen an exhibition of Cornover's work, and had been so impressed that he unconsciously assumed Cornoyer's manner for the moment. Strange, wasn't it?"

Along the opposite wall, under the hadowy rafters of the loft, were larger canvases, renderings in oil of the winter fishing village, with thick white snow encrusted on gabled roofs; cool shaded moments in a pine wood, with rich purple shadows and gray rocks woven with mosses in red browns and greens—the result of six years spent in the little town of Rockport. Iterally from the world over, twenty members, considered itself the intellectual élite of the town. Its larger proportion of Scotsmen have at some time or other in their lives known what poetry is, divined its true significance, and captured so as render, if only for a moment, the flying vision."

This last observation concerning the number of Scotsmen who have achieved beauty in verse is well borne out by a study of Burns's prose writing, such as his "Remarks on Scottish Song." After reading this, one is inclined to believe that every little hamlet, even every little street in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Paisley. has had its humble laureate; and that in highlands and lowlands multitudes of men and women have been moved to sing who, in another country many of the songs he mentions were composed, not only by literate and educated persons—professional writers, clergymen, and teachers but by weavers, plowmen, shepherds, drovers, tramps, wastrels, literary hacks, huntsmen, and keepers of kennels, as well as by city officials, country lairds, and fine ladies of the

The case of Scotland seems to present a partial answer to the old question, whether poetry can ever be democratic or, conversely, whether art, because of the conditions that surround its production and appreciation, must not always be an aristocratic thing, cultivated by the few and the elect. One might use the life of Burns as an instance to the contrary, but a dozen or a score of other poets less well known would paint the moral just as well, that in Scotland, for two hundred years, poetry was a pursuit or an avocation revered by high and low, rich and poor, learned and illiterate, as, perhaps, it has never been in any other country.

4 4 4 I have a curious old edition of poems of Robert Tannahill, Paisley weaver, which bears out the Paisiey weaver, which bears out the point. Here is a book of five hundred and fifty pages, lovingly compiled by a fellow townsman, David Semple, in 1876, in which with minute detail is laid bare, not only the life of the craftsman-poet, but the entire literary and social life of the town of Paisley on "lower middle class" levels between 1775 and 1815. The poems of Tannahill would fill hardly one hundred and fifty pages of the volume, and those that could interest

The steps in this that his whole nature was changed. renewing, perhaps, may not appear to be identical with all of us, because our problems and environment are different, and our ideals and living are not the same Taken as a whole, however, reformation is the overcoming of the beliefs of the flesh, or matter.

Many feel the need of self-improvement, and have made frequent attempts at reform without success, because they had no understanding of divine Principle, which would make the reform possible. Such attempts are like that of the child trying to correct a mistake in some arithmetical problem without a sufficient understanding of the rules of numbers to make the nece sary correction. Through Christian Science, however, an understanding of divine Principle is obtained by which reformation becomes practical, and progress is steady, without the ebbing and flowing of human hopes and disappointments.

In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 5) Mrs. Eddy has written: "Sorrow for wrong-doing is but one step towards reform and the very easiest step. The next and great step required by wisdom is the test of our sincerity,--namely, reformation." Many think that the statement, "I am sorry," cancels the results of wrongdoing. Ofttimes sorrow or regret is expressed for wrongdoing. For instance, the discovery of the sin, or the evil intent falling short of its purpose, or the being found out may often be a basis of sorrow. If sorrow for wrongdoing opens the door to right Now, contrast these two men with Judas after his betrayal of Jesus. The infamy of his betrayal suddenly. struck home, and the Biblical account states that he "repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders." He recognized his sin, expressed regret in voice and action by returning the bribe, but he did not seek the road of reformation by which he could rise above evil; rather he sought his selfdestruction. His recognition of evilwas not followed by the reformation of his life, so greatly needed.

One should not stop at the recognition of evil in thought or action. The recognition must be followed by reformation, which brings about spirituality by seeing the allness of good, and the consequent nothingness of evil. A pure. good life speaks for itself, and is the product of reformation. Thereby we prove that man actually is the perfect image of God.

Just what then is reformation? Correctly seen, it is a choice between matter and Spirit, with the choice in favor. of Spirit and spiritual things. Complete reformation is the renunciation of all belief in matter, either as entity or power, and the full acceptance of God by obeying in its entirety the First Commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." That is the ideal or ultimate of reformation; and it can be attained only through our victories over the flesh. These victories start with the simple demonstrations of God's allness in nullifying the claims of matter. These claims to existence may seem countless; but Mrs. Eddy puts them under four heads when she writes in "the scientific statement of being" on page 468 of same plane of thinking as before, and Science and Health. "There is no life. as ready to commit the wrong, or a truth, intelligence, nor substance in matter." Now and again some transatlantic foe of prohibition in the United States rises to denounce that policy

Liquor and International Amity as violative of the rights and liberties of the people of other states. When the decision of the United States Supreme Court relative to bringing liquors on transatlantic liners into American ports under seal was first promulgated, the international forces of liquor raised an outcry that shook the firmament. The sacred right of all mankind to drink alcohol on the high seas was violated, according to their protest. When the United States suggested that the inconvenience arising from the situation might be averted if, as a measure of self-protection, American officials were given authority to search suspicious vessels hovering off the coast just outside the three-mile limit, it was charged that immemorial international law was to be distorted to serve the puritanic purposes of the prohibitionists of the United States.

It is, however, to be noted that all the United States asks of other nations in respect to prohibition is that it shall not be hampered by them in its efforts to enforce its domestic law within its own borders. If it seeks to investigate the nature of vessels seen hovering just outside the three-mile limit, it is because the business of smuggling liquor into the United States has reached prodigious proportions without apparent purpose on the part of friendly nations to deny it the protection of their flags. And the law, which has been construed to prohibit the admittance of liquor, even under seal, to American ports, was not designed to prevent travelers on foreign ships from drinking whatever they might desire, but rather to protect the United States against a flood of unlawful liquor smuggled into its ports.

In adopting, or urging, these methods for the protection of its own territory from the invasion of the foreign liquor interests, the United States is not chargeable with any violation of the rights of foreign nations. If it chose, however, to adopt the methods of certain European nations seeking to protect the interests of their producers of wines and brandies, it might readily intrench upon such rights. The United States imports annually about $140,000,000 worth of goods from France. Let us suppose that the State Department should notify the French Government that unless the sale of liquor was prohibited in France all commercial relations between that country and the United States would be stopped! The outcry, not only of the liquor interests but of all who believe in the right of a nation to conduct its internal affairs free from foreign intervention, would be deafening. And properly so. We can easily imagine the epithets which would be applied to the American people if their Government sought to impose restrictions of this character upon other peoples. Puritans, bluenoses, fanatics, would be the mildest of these.

But consider a moment. Is it any more indefensible to force a nation to abstain from drinking than it is to force it to drink alcohol? At this moment Finland is suffering a commercial embargo at the hands of Spain, Portugal, and France because it refuses to admit their wines to its markets. Little Iceland went "dry" some years ago, and was living contentedly and prosperously under that régime when Portugal served notice that unless Iceland would buy its wines it would not buy Iceland's fish—the only export of the Icelanders. The prohibition law was, therefore, abandoned by Iceland under foreign pressure, and later similar tactics on the part of liquor-ridden governments compelled Denmark to change its policy of dealing with alcoholic drinks.

In the United States the determination of the liquor interests to violate the laws of dry states compelled the enactment of nation-wide prohibition. The lesson is likely to be learned by the whole world if the rights of independent nations are thus to be menaced by the forces of King Alcohol.

ONE of the relatively minor, but actually extremely important questions which is within the jurisdiction of the Slavery and the League League of Nations, and which it is planning to take up for consideration in Geneva this month, is the great issue of slavery in Africa. In view of this fact a memorial was prepared not long since by the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines' Protection Society in England. This was addressed to the League over the signatures of a number of authorities upon overseas administrations, and carried with it also the support of many prominent public men, such as the Bishop of London. It specified three main areas in Africa, in which slavery obtains today in systems under which a definite and salable property right is established over the persons of the slaves, and stated that within these areas more than 1,000,000 slaves are held in bondage.

These three principal areas are Abyssinia, the mandated areas of southwest Africa and Tanganyika, and the memorial recommended that steps be taken to secure the conditional entrance of Abyssinia into the League, as thereby there would be conferred "upon Africa the greatest blessing which has yet visited the Dark Continent—namely, entirely disinterested but effective assistance in evolving a self-governing African state, free from the institution of slavery." Evidence was also quoted from official sources to support the statements made.

Whether or not the recommendation of the society is followed that this work shall be alletted to a definite department of the League, is of less importance than the fact that the question is to be definitely opened as a vital issue affecting the well-being of humanity as a whole. The slavery problem is one upon which the United States passed its judgment half a century ago, and today

America looks back upon the decision made at that time with the realization that therefrom have sprung blessings innumerable. Of course, in this instance, as in every great reform, some may appear to suffer hardships as a result of the actual change of conditions, but when it is recalled that the reform is intended to obviate far greater hardships, experienced by thousands over periods of years, decades and generations, this point does not carry great weight. Slavery as a system is a relic of the Middle Ages. The advancing century demands its abolition. The League of Nations is afforded a wonderful opportunity to demonstrate its true vision in thus having the slavery issue come before it for consideration. It is to be expected that it will reach wise decisions as a result of its deliberations.

THE United States Coal Commission's report has been submitted to President Coolidge. The impartiality

A Coal Magna Charta of the commission's members, the decisiveness of their language, and, above all, their facilities for piercing the mystery of the American coal industry, make the document one of the most important ever issued in this connection. In a nutshell, the six investigators find an irresistible clash in the coal fields between two sets of acknowledged rights: the right of the individual to join a union, and the right of a corporation to discharge him if he joins the union; in other words, a contest involving the existence or destruction of the United Mine Workers of America. Each side "admits," in the words of the report, "the principle in which the other believes, but each is quite satisfied that peace can only come by killing the other fellow's principle."

From this clash of opposing, but indisputable, rights, likened to the clash between the definition of the Declaration of Independence concerning liberty and the original constitutional right of slavery, has come an armistice in the coal fields. It exists today, but is liable to break down in "riot, bloodshed, and the destruction of property," simply because there is no compromise, and no yardstick by which the conflicting rights of the parties may be measured, even if arbitration were employed.

It is this yardstick, in the form of a coal code, which the commission now offers. In seven recommendations, which may become a coal Magna Charta, a definite path to peace is proposed. The first three articles lay down the miner's right to bargain individually or collectively without coercion from corporation or union, and affirm that, though the Constitution does not permit a wage contract to have the force of law, it should be respected by each party. The fourth enunciates a policy of public interest before which private rights must yield enough to secure peace, and the fifth urges a wage sufficient to secure an American standard of living.

The final articles are the most important, as they are the most definite recommendations. One proposes a presidential "fact-finder" at each period of contract negotiations, to keep the public informed, so that it will never enter a strike period blindfolded. The last proposes a system of arbitration boards, local and appellate.

These are the recommendations of the commission, of such evident value that Congress in all probability will translate them into law. From first to last, the commission declares, and the public will admit, that in a clash of "rights" the law will always be "the average of the judgment and conscience of the community," and that above all and in defiance of whatever theoretical rights may stand in the way, "the general public has a right to demand of its Government that it shall not freeze in the midst of an abundance of coal."

THERE is grave reason to question the propriety of the issuance, by the Geological Bureau of the United States Department of the Interior, of a map purporting to show sections of the world, and particularly of the United States, menaced by earthquakes. There is even more reason to doubt is even more reason to doubt the wisdom of the publication of this map, with accompanying comment in newspapers of wide circulation. For the map shows certain portions of the United States, notably practically the whole of the Pacific coast, as being in what the natural scientists, with very doubtful reason, call the earthquake belt. And it lays great stress upon the existence of certain submarine gulfs which, these practically the whole of the Pacific coast, as being in what the natural scientists, with very doubtful reason, call the earthquake belt. And it lays great stress upon the existence of certain submarine gulfs which, these same men assert, tie in one bond of common subjection to the peril of seismic convulsions the Pacific coast of the United States and the Asiatic region which has so recently suffered terribly from earthquakes.

Now, material science has developed in a way which undoubtedly has won for it very wide respect. The prophecies of students who have made a systematic study of geological conditions are taken by the multitude at much more than their actual value. The dangerous effect, therefore, of the publication of such predictions and such diagrams as were given to the American press last Sunday is to arouse a certain public fear, which is likely to spread to a degree that will be injurious to the sections affected. These natural scientists do not profess to be able to control the movements of the earth. The publication of their deductions from incomplete data, or, perhaps, of their imaginations, therefore can accomplish no possible good. But it can arouse apprehension, distrust, and fear in the minds of men that will be distinctly harmful to those thus affected, and to the neighborhoods which have been incorporated in the map as in the danger

We think it would be wise for those at the head of governmental bureaux at least not to encourage journalistic sensationalism by giving forth pseudo-scientific statements of conditions which must be based upon insufficient data, and the deductions from which are subject to that great factor of error that appears in all forms of human reasoning.

Many persons in the United States whose names and addresses are available to those who make up mailing Camouflaging Medical Quackery lists for the use of the exploiters of wares of undetermined value are just now being circularized by advertising promoters of socalled health agencies. Public opinion in the United States has effectively silenced the patentmedicine advertisers who a decade ago practiced their suggestive psychology at a cost of millions of dollars annually paid to the publishers of city and country newspapers. For the most part, the columns of all self-respecting journals are now free from the taint so long carried. But the mails appear still to be open to the avaricious quacks who lose no opportunity to extort dollars from the unwary.

A favorite method of the gentlemen engaged in this form of legalized piracy seems to be to make it appear that their organizations exist and operate under federal authority and that they are a part of the so-called governmental research activities devoted to an effort to ascertain, by analysis and experimentation, what percentage, if any, of the people of the United States are normally healthy. One of these institutions which seems to be industriously circulating such misleading propaganda is located in Chicago. It seems to have adopted the prefix "national" without governmental warrant and ostensibly with the hope that those circularized will

The effort of all these propagandists seems to be to keep fear ever before the people, so that even when they are well they will consult some specialist to discover whether or not they are to remain well. The thought of fear and apprehension is constantly presented, always with the suggestion that the cure offered or the method indicated, available at a price named with becoming modesty, gives the only assurance of continued safety.

jump to the conclusion that it is an authorized federal

There are millions of persons in the world today who are immune to any such false psychology, but there are many other millions who are susceptible to evil suggestion which engenders fear and superstition. Some day those who are compelled to suffer the imposition now practiced will make it as impossible for the exploiters of such propaganda to use the mails with impunity as for their less sagacious brethren to advertise their nostrums in newspapers and magazines.

Those who travel about much or little by automobile can hardly escape a too familiar contact with the irresponsible driver who "takes a chance" at the expense of others on the streets and highways. With each returning season the menace increases, apparently in exact proportion to the increase in the number of automobiles. But the hazard increases in even greater proportion because of greater congestion of traffic on the principal roadways leading to and from the cities and towns. Gradually the officials, state and municipal, are learning to regulate and control the general course of traffic. Remarkable efficiency, with a comparatively small number of arrests, has been attained in the last few years. Otherwise conditions would be unendurable in those sections, especially, where summer tourist travel is heavy. Eventually it may develop that the necessity will be realized of making all main highways "one-way" roads. Wherever it has been possible so-to arrange traffic routes in the cities, the menace of the irresponsible driver has been lessened. But the expense of such an undertaking on the state highways would be tremendous, and until that plan or some other equally effective one can be worked out, definite steps should be taken to eliminate the reckless or wanton driver from the roads. It was stated officially in Massachusetts recently that hundreds of unlicensed persons are operating automobiles, and that scores of other persons whose licenses have been revoked for cause are continuing to drive. Surely there should be no leniency shown those who thus offend. The unavoidable hazards are great enough without adding to them the menace of the known inefficient or culpable drivers.

Editorial Notes

It is not necessary to take at all seriously the expressed opinion of Canon William Carnegie of Westminster Abbev and rector of St. Margaret's Church. London, on arriving in New York the other day, that prohibition is an outgrowth of Puritanism, and Puritanism is but half-way Christianity. The habit of people of note in one country airing their views upon the considered policy of another country, immediately upon their entrance into it, has become so prevalent of late that the public has, fortunately, ceased to give it much attention. It would be far more conducive to the best interests of all concerned, however, if visitors would pay more attention to the amenities of traveling and less to an apparent attempt to advise the authorities of the country of which they are the temporary guests as to how to conduct its policies.

The city in Connecticut which greets its motorist visitors with the gracious sign, "Please Drive Considerately," is far more likely to obtain from them a fitting answer than those cities which demand that automobilists keep down their speed to an almost impossible slow rate of progress. The average motorist is anxious to pay to the citizens of the various communities through which he travels the due amenities of a visitor's courtesy, and this includes proper respect for the speed laws. A request couched in friendly terms, however, is far more likely to obtain a courteous response than all the demands in the world:

Beloved Vagabonds

DUBLIN, Aug. 24 (Special Correspondence)—Here we are in the Queen's County, "straining upon the start," for this is the beginning of our great journey. Quite suddenly, from the status of thoughtful and respectable folk, we became thoughtfree tramps, vagabonds, tinkers, gypsies, strolling players, circus riders, sellers of old clothes and brooms, cinema actors, strayed irregulars-for it was to all these trades and professions we were variously assigned by the puzzled folk living between here and the Cliffs of Moher on the coast of County Clare. Indeed, not far from Lahinch, where we camped one night, a shepherd was so sure we were players that he left the sheep on the mountain side, rushed down into the village and told his friends that the players had arrived. When asked where were the swing boats and merry-go-rounds, he explained we were returning to Ennistymon for them, and that the fair would be ready in a day or two! Since when, I have been thinking deeply about Celtic imagination!

After all, any suspicion you might have cared to entertain about us, would have been very excusable. The world is not peopled with Walt Whitmans, or Paragots, or any of these romantic vagabonds who lurch across literature. Also as a French gendarme once said, when about to arrest me as a tramp, "One does not walk from Paris for pleasure!" And if the mere fact of our walking was not sufficient, you must admit that when one of the finest mares you ever saw pulls a spring cart laden with all sorts of mysteries made more mysterious by being covered with a tarpaulin, and when this elegant turn-out is followed by a party of mud-splashed, wild-haired and tattered people carrying heavy sticks, it is not unnatural to wonder, "Now, where did they get that horse from?" Just in that tone, too!

When I have thoroughly studied the method of Adam Lindsay Gordon, and when the poetical impulse is upon me, I shall have to write an ode to that mare. Jemima was her name, and docility was her nature. If she could have worn an apron, and carried a dust pan and brush, no one would have thought it odd. She did everything with that complete unconcern which makes the horse a noble animal and herself the noblest of them all. Her shoes would come off, her harness would break, with an ease, which, in the perspective of time, now seems admirable. She liked to rub her nose on the tents on wet nights, and to chew the tent pegs. Her mission in life was a daylong search for oats, and considering they were kept in the cart, I think it is extremely to her credit that she did not insist on walking backward throughout the journey! Once, by the light of a watery star on an uncertain Galway night, she kicked an empty pail all round the camp, because it had contained oats a few days previously! While we were at the Cliffs of Moher, rejoicing in the surf of the "long league rollers" of the Atlantic, Jemima, at the camp some 600 feet above, fulfilled the lusts of the flesh by eating all our potatoes!

On the road to Birr, while we were lunching, she bolted down the hill to the nearest village, and was brought back later, quiet of eye and thoughtful. But, in spite of all, at Cloughjordan, where the people would at first have nothing to do with us and where the Civic Guard shut the door nervously in our faces, it was Jemima, steaming and triumphantly feminine, who softened the heart of the blacksmith and wheedled round the whole town. I hear the blacksmith's enthusiastic conversation with Paddy Kelly, as he selected his nails.

"Sure, that's a fine mare, Paddy."
"It is so," says Paddy, "an' Irish bred."

"What would she be now? Would she be sixteen hands?"
"Och, she might. She's a grand mare, the like you'd never see on the road with tinkers at all, at all."

So Jemima saved us.

It will be a sad day if I forget how the discomfort of sitting in a pool of water on the uneven tarpaulin, the rain streaming into my clothes, was as nothing to the joy of pulling in the soaking reins and shouting, "Come on, now, Jemima! Come on, now, will you!"—and hearing Jemima sigh, and heave in her flanks and shake her head and trot! Trot, mark you! Why, what heroic couplets would old Cowper not have written if his John Gilpin had persuaded our Jemima to trot! Sentimental? You would have been far worse had you known Jemima!

But that is over now and Jemima is eating her head off in the Queen's County and neighing to every other mare within hearing. And we—can you believe it?—are no longer taken for tramps and tinkers. But, at the beginning of our great journey, as we trekked over the mountains, the cart jolting squeaking, rattling, groaning, and the bucket swinging like an excited pendulum behind and crashing not altogether unmusically against the wheel, there was none of the sadness of reminiscence for us. As gayly as any gentle knights who might go pricking on any plain, or as large lunged as Walt Whitman,

The east and the west are mine,
And the north and the south are mine.
or more thoughtfully perhaps:

From this hour I ordain myself loos'd of limits and imaginary lines,
Going where I list, my own master total and absolute,

Listening to others, considering well what they say, Pausing, searching, receiving, contemplating gently, but with undeniable will,
Divesting myself of the holds that would hold me.

And there you picture us outlined for a romantic moment against the sky; a pause, and we are stepping down into Tipperary—or King's County, is it? I forget—in the first stage of our great Irish vagabond age.

Conditions Prevailing in the Sun and Stars

UNDER conditions prevailing in the sun and stars, says Dr. Aston of Cambridge, according to Ellwood Hendrick in The North American Review, the fractional mass is converted into energy. He further declares that if only 1-10 of the hydrogen which we know by spectroscopic analysis to be contained in the sun were converted into helium, we should have solar energy produced by this source alone to last for over 1,000,000,000 years. Thus it appears that creation is going on in the sun and stars today just as actively as when this earth was hurled forth into space. Elements are not permanent; they are not eternal; they are organized by the forces of nature out of positive and negative charges of electricity originally, into hydrogen, from hydrogen to helium, and from these to all the other elements. When elements become too complex they become radioactive and shoot out from their nuclei hydrogen and helium atoms or positive and negative charges. This is constantly taking place among the heavy atoms in planets and moons, and the very light atoms, being too light to be held by gravity, pass off again into space. Creation and disintegration thus appear as one vast continuum. The point so long at issue between chemists and geologists that the sun could not last as long as geology demands that it must have lasted, fades away entirely.
